Attention, Medical Residency Applicants:
Without a Compelling Personal Statement,
Your Application Will Be DEAD ON ARRIVAL

Maximize Your Chances for Success, with the Int’l Medical Graduate’s “Secret Weapon”:
Harvard Graduate Daniel K. Berman, Ph.D.

An Open Letter to Medical Residency Applicants from the USA’s Most Elite “Writing Doctor”

Dear Doctor,

Let’s face it: The rejection rate of international medical graduates applying for residency programs is disturbingly high. When an admissions committee is faced with a deluge of international applicants, many of whom have roughly equivalent backgrounds, the personal statement and other supporting material (e.g., the applicant’s CV, letters of recommendation and interview performance) typically serve the function of tie breaker—and sometimes even serve as a kind of equalizer, trumping other considerations, making applicants with less impressive backgrounds more competitive than they otherwise would be, against “superior” competing applicants. That’s why it’s so important for you to have a compelling personal statement.

For more than three decades, I’ve been helping international applicants make their dreams come true, as dozens of five-star online reviews at sites such as Yelp and GooglePlus will attest. I can tell you with complete confidence that, to the best of my knowledge, there is no one else, anywhere in the world today, with my level of knowledge and expertise, who is providing this type of service. Yes, there are websites that are offering these services, staffed by anonymous writers who churn out work that is usually embarrassingly bad, as evidenced by the samples they show.

I am not some anonymous person, hiding behind a website, whose name you will never know and whom you could never meet. I do not employ others to do the work for me. I work on my own and do all the work myself. When the situation lends itself to working asynchronously, I can. I can edit files sent to me by email and I can also work in real time with individuals remotely, using a combination of Google Drive and a voice connection. The work I do is not only top-notch. It is also strictly confidential. In addition to helping you write a compelling personal statement, I also assist with letters of recommendation. I can edit your CV and provide you with interview training the quality of which you will never get anywhere else. Though it’s beyond my power to guarantee you any particular result, I can guarantee that I will improve your chances of success—and improve them to a degree that is significant.

One word of caution: I do get busy at times and, as I said, I do all the work myself. I don’t farm out assignments to less skilled independent contractors. So if you think you may need my help, it would be best not to wait until the last minute. For detailed information, at no cost or obligation, email me at danielkberman@gmail.com. This may just be one of the best investments of a moment of your time that you will ever make.

To Your Success!

Daniel K. Berman